

2014 eucen AUTUMN SEMINAR

*How to develop University Lifelong Learning programmes:
From the needs analysis to the design.*

Dialogue between research and practice

Barcelona, Thursday 06-Friday 07 November 2014

---

WORKSHOP LEADER

Lindsey EL AMOUD
University College Cork

Since 2012, Lyndsey El Amoud has been leading the Professional Development unit in Adult Continuing Education (ACE) at UCC. Working with discipline experts within UCC, as well as a range of external professional bodies, Lyndsey develops part-time programmes for professionals to aid with their career progression and employability, including programmes in the disciplines of Human Resource Management, Learning and Development, and Health and Safety.

She works with a wide range of schools and disciplines within UCC in designing and delivering customised capacity-building academic programmes for individual organisations and industries. These programmes, including a Diploma in Management and Team Development and a Higher Diploma in Leadership Development, are then delivered onsite within government agencies, multinational corporations, etc. across Ireland.

From 2008-2012, she was the UCC representative on the Irish government funded research project, 'Roadmap for Employment Academic Partnerships (REAP)', during which time her research focused on the interface between academia and industry and the wide span of engagements that this entails.

She is a political science graduate who worked in the Department of Government, University College Cork (UCC) until 2008 delivering undergraduate lectures on international relations and European politics, while undertaking her PhD on international terrorism (in progress).